SO SAYS
JAPAN
a game of graphs and guesses

Rules

So Says Japan is a game of communication and educated guesses.

Each turn a player will draw a card from the deck. They will tell the other players the question, answers and one percentage from the data on the card like this:

The question is 'What is your favourite color?' People answered Blue, Pink, Red, Green and Yellow. 22% of people said blue.

What is your favourite color?

Green 5%
Red 45%
Pink 10%
Blue 20%
Yellow 30%

They will then ask one question about the card, for example:

What percentage of people answered "red"?

The other players will then guess what percentage of people said red and how popular the answer was. They will then also guess whether 'Red' is more popular than 'blue' or whatever the question asker read out.

The question asker will then reveal the card and the other players will score points if they were correct.

Play until someone scores 50 points or, for a shorter game, set your own goal to reach.
